“What do they forget, Abbu?”

“They forget that even the strength to continue...is a gift.
The willpower they are proud of...the motivation that carried them...the emotional stability that kept them standing...the people who supported them...the opportunities placed before them... even the mind that allowed them to recognize those opportunities...
all of it came from Allah.”

Zayd lowered his eyes.

“They may sacrifice. They may endure pain that no one else can see.

And they may deserve to be proud of the effort they made.

But effort should create gratitude...

...not arrogance.”

Khalid looked towards the night sky.

“Years ago, people boasted openly about their family names.

They spoke proudly about their wealth.

Their ancestry. Their position in society. They wanted everyone to know that they stood above others.”
