

“Why do you think you passed the exams?
Was there a reason behind your success?
Something that you have been hiding inside?”

“Was it because you felt you had to prove everyone wrong?
Maybe you wanted to show them that despite your struggles
you could become just as good as everyone else.”

Zayd lowered his eyes. His father continued gently.
“And perhaps...without even realizing it, you felt you had to prove to Allah that you were worthy.
Maybe deep down, you blamed yourself
because He created you differently.”

The words struck somewhere deep inside him.
Tears slowly filled Zayd's eyes.
He had never spoken those thoughts aloud.

Yet somehow... his father already knew.
