

I “I still don’t see the connection you are trying to make, Abbu.”

Khalid looked at his son. “Then let us look at your own life. When you lost the use of your right hand did you blame Allah?”

Zayd shook his head.

“No.”

“What did you say?”

Zayd thought for a moment. “I thanked Allah.”

Khalid smiled gently. “You thanked Him?”

“Yes.”

“For what?”

“For giving me another way to continue doing the things I loved.”

Zayd looked down at his left hand. “At first...I thought it would take years. I thought I would have to begin everything again. But Allah made the transition easier than I expected. I learned to write with my left hand.”

“It did not happen immediately...but it happened much faster than I thought it would.”

Khalid nodded.

“You could have looked at your right hand and asked why something had been taken from you.

“But instead...you looked at your left hand and thanked Allah for what remained.”

Zayd listened carefully.
