

Khalid smiled. “There is no shame in saying I don’t understand.”

He chuckled softly. “Do you know, I used to ask your grandfather hundreds of questions too. So many, that sometimes he would laugh before I even finished speaking.”

Zayd smiled. “Really?”

“Oh yes. I wanted to know why the sky changed colour.

Why Allah made mosquitoes.

Why people prayed.

Why some people were kind and others were cruel.”

Khalid looked towards the window.

“The people who stop asking... often stop growing.

“But the people who ask sincerely...