

halid joined him by the window as the first hint of dawn colored the sky.

“See the moon and the sun?” Khalid asked.

“The sun and moon take turns and never compete; they each have their time. When night comes, the sun doesn’t panic or worry that it has failed. It doesn’t disappear forever. It simply waits for its moment and returns.

We must learn to be the same with our own light.”

Zayd looked at the horizon, watching the sun rise a little higher, spilling gold across the sky.

He understood.

Allah gives every day a new chance.

What matters is not perfection, but the sincerity to keep trying.

He turned to his father and smiled. “JazakAllah khair, Abbu.”

Khalid ruffled his hair. “I’m proud of you, my son.”

Together, they watched the new day begin
—full of hope, mercy, and endless possibilities.