

ayd watched the light grow.

He understood now that success was the process of cleansing the soul— the Nafs— over and over, just as the sun rises again and again.

He didn't have to be perfect; he just had to keep returning.

He picked up his sketchbook, not with the pressure to be great, but with the simple joy of beginning again.

The sun would rise, and so would he.

He whispered a small dua:

“Ya Allah, guide me, help me, and keep me on the path that pleases You.” With a heart full of hope and a sketchbook full of dreams, Zayd took a deep breath...

and began again.