

“And now, why do you think you passed your exams?”

“Was it because you had stronger willpower than the other students?”

“Was it because you spent far more time studying than they did?”

“Was it because you knew the questions beforehand?”

“Was it because you are a student with special needs, so you burned the midnight oil studying while they were asleep?”

Zayd thought about the questions and about what the other children had said earlier.

It did not take him long to answer.

“I think there must have been a mistake somewhere. Maybe they graded my paper incorrectly. Maybe my questions really were easier.”