

One night, Zayd stood outside his father's study. His hand hovered over the door. He wanted to knock... but something held him back. What if Abbu thought his questions were silly? What if everyone already knew the answers... except him?

He took one slow breath. Then another.

Finally...

he knocked.

"Come in."

Khalid looked up from the Qur'an he had been reading.

He smiled. "What is it, Zayd?"

Zayd lowered his eyes. "Abbu...I'm sorry."

Khalid blinked.

"For what?"