

“I ask too many questions. I don’t mean to.”

“I’m not trying to argue. I just...”

“I can’t stop asking. If I don’t understand something...
my mind keeps thinking about it.”

For a moment the room was silent.

Then Khalid smiled. Not a disappointed smile.

A warm one. The kind that made a worried heart feel lighter.

“I thought you had broken something.”

Zayd looked up. Then...

for the first time that day...

he laughed.

“I’ve never been upset by your questions, Zayd. In fact,
I think sincere questions are one of Allah’s greatest gifts.”

Zayd hesitated.
