

halid looked at his son. "Can I ask you something?"
Zayd nodded slowly.

"Do you think taking your medicine means your faith is weak?"

Zayd looked down. His fingers played with the edge of his sleeve. "Maybe..." he whispered.
Khalid didn't rush. He let the words settle.

Then he said, "When we visited Grandma in the hospital..."

"Did we laugh at the man in the wheelchair?"

"No."

"Did we tell the woman who couldn't walk to just try harder?"

"No."

"Did we tell the patient in pain to simply have stronger faith?"

"No."

"Why not?"

Zayd was silent.

Khalid continued gently.

"Because we could see their wounds."
