

Many illnesses leave scars people can see.
Yours does not.” He paused.

“They weren’t there during the nights you begged Allah for sleep. They don’t know that your medicine sometimes makes you tired... slow... or steals some of your laughter. They weren’t there when your right hand started trembling and you had to learn to write again with your left hand. When you lost your ability to draw and paint, depriving you of creating art and displaying your creativity. They don’t see the sacrifice.”

“But you still take it. Why Zayd? Many others in your spot do not.”

“They are pressured into believing that they have weak iman if they take medication. People around them accuse them of being weak minded... the famous Mind Over Matter phrase. Then there are people who akin it to cheating, like an athlete that cheats by taking enhancers. You take medication rather than handling it like an adult.”

“So why Zayd... why do you take it? Even after all the stigma.”
