

he next morning, Zayd didn't try to fix everything at once.

He started small. He picked up the books from his floor and stacked them neatly on the shelf.

As he worked, he realized that his "messy" thoughts were often where his best drawings came from.

He wasn't broken; he was just in progress.

He realized that his unique way of seeing the world was a gift that simply needed balance.

He made his bed, opened the window, and let the fresh air in. He took a deep breath and smiled.

Today, he would keep trying—one small step at a time.