

That night, the silence of the house
felt heavy and suffocating.
Zayd sat on his bed long after the evening prayer ended.

He felt a deep, gnawing guilt.
He thought about the spilled milk,
the messy room,
and the prayers he sometimes rushed through.

His voice, whispered into the dark,
“Why can’t I just be better?
Does Allah only see me unworthy?
Why do I keep on stumbling?”

Tears rolled down his cheeks.
But as he sat there, something inside him whispered back: “I can start again.”

He wiped his face, took a deep breath,
and stood up. “Ya Allah,” he said,
“Guide me. Help me be better than I was yesterday.”

He stood in Qiyam, pouring his heart out to Allah, asking for strength, forgiveness, and guidance.
